Army Monoplane Winging Way Across To Hawaii; Soon Disappears Into Fog; Smith May Follow At Any Minute

By Ellis H. Martin

I. N. S. Staff Correspondent

OAKLAND MUNICIPAL AIRPORT, OAKLAND, Cal., June 28.—On their way to new triumphs and taking the honor of being the first to start the race to bridge the Pacific between California and Hawaii, the giant army monoplane started its takeoff here today at 7:08 a. m.

Down the fairway went the big plane. A big cloud of dust blew up behind. A crowd of 75,000 went wild and roared in excitement.

The big plane taxied a little more than a mile down the runway and then rose gracefully from the field to a beautiful takeoff half a minute later.

The Fokker headed over the island-city of Alameda, crossing the Oakland Bay on its long flight toward Hawaii.

They then turned west and soon faded to a speck in the sky.

"My last words to those two brave army boys," said Maj. Gen. Patrick, "were 'God bless you both and may you get there well and safe.'"

A fog over the bay impeded visibility.

Two planes escorted the Fokker, one going on each side of the army entrant.

Ernest Smith, air mail pilot and civilian entry in the race, immediately ordered his plane to get set for an immediate take-off. The civilian flyer planned to hop off in pursuit of the big Fokker within 20 minutes.

The Fokker, before disappearing in the haze, reached an altitude of 6,000 feet. Five planes from Crissy Field flew 3,000 feet below.

Other pursuit planes formed a personal escort to the Fokker flying on the same 6,000 foot level.

At 7:19 o'clock, Ernest Smith was ready to leave within a few minutes.

Smith climbed into the cockpit at 7:20 a. m., settled down, and then clambered out again.

Smith was tendered congratulations and best wishes by Maj. Gen. Patrick.

"It is a race to Hawaii, I guess," Patrick remarked.

"Go get 'em, Ernie," howled the crowd.

"I'll grab 'em," shouted back Smith.

Maj. Gen. Patrick declared the take-off of the two army flyers was much better than they had ever hoped for, considering the tremendous weight of the plane.

"It was beautiful," exulted Patrick.

MUNICIPAL AIRPORT, OAKLAND, Cal., June 28.—Poised like two huge birds at the head of the runway which marks the start of a 2,400 mile aerial race two planes early today awaited the signal to be off for Hawaii.

The giant army tri-motored Fokker plane, its polished olive drab wings gleaming beneath the flood lights, waited only the bidding of its master at the controls—Lieut. Lester Maitland who with Lieut. Albert Hegenberger, as navigator, will uphold the military in the greatest aerial race in history.

A scant twenty yards away, another monoplane, silver gray of wings and fuselage, powered by a single motor, and a mere fledgling in size compared to the army eagle, was "raring to go" for its pilot, Ernest Smith, air mail pilot and civilian entry in the fight for the honor of first spanning the distance between the Pacific Coast and Hawaii by air.

The army plane under heavy guard spent the night under canvas. It was pronounced ready to go late yesterday, filled up with 1100 gallons of gasoline and then covered with tarpaulins. Shortly after 3 o'clock this morning mechanics began swarming over the machine on their final check.

The Smith camp was a scene of all night activity. Smith did not complete his final rest until late last night. He ordered a number of minor adjustments and all night his mechanics labored so that their pride "The City of Oakland" as the airship was christened at midnight might be ready to-day. A new set of wheels arrived at the field shortly before 3 o'clock and the force set to work changing this gear.

The rival aviators spent the night in the same hotel in Oakland. Lieuts. Maitland and Hegenberger retired early but Smith and his navigator, Charles Carter, did not get to bed until after midnight.

All night approximately 3,000 people kept vigil for the takeoff from the public road just above the flying field which was cleared of all spectators early last night. This crowd was swelling rapidly as dawn came with indications that at least 5,000 would witness the event.

The army plane was expected to require the full length of the runway to takeoff. Because of the smaller size and lighter load, the Smith plane in test flights had taken the air successfully after traversing less than a third of the length of the mile and an eighth runway.

Weather conditions were ideal. The early morning was clear and almost calm. Favorable conditions along the airway to Hawaii were reported by the United States Weather Bureau.

INTERESTING NEWS THROUGHOUT STATE

STATE NEWS NOTES

PHILADELPHIA, June 28 (I.N.S.)—If you are suffering from what you believe to be indigestion, consult a heart specialist.

This is the advice of Dr. Joseph B. Wolfe, director of Electro-Cardiography in the School of Medicine of Temple University. Your so-called dyspepsia may be a serious heart ailment, declares Dr. Wolfe, who out of an experience of testing the human heart for many years, asserts that many attacks of what is mistaken for indigestion, particularly in middle-aged persons, may be definitely traced to disturbances of the heart and circulation, which in turn are responsible for gastro-intestinal symptoms.

PITTSBURGH, June 28 (I.N.S.)—There is more money in the East than in gold mining "out West," according to George Datsch, 62, of Butte, Mont. Datsch is on his way back to Butte after claiming a $2,500 estate left him by a brother here.

Datsch said he left Pittsburgh 25 years ago for the Klondike regions of Alaska during the gold rush. He settled in Montana, however, where he carried out his prospecting. The Goddess of Fortune did not smile on him, and he eked out a bare living.

When his brother died, several years ago, relatives could find no trace of Datsch. A widespread search ended this month, when the veteran miner, dressed in typical corduroy and blue denim, claimed his share of the brother's estate in Orphans' Court here.

KANE, Pa., June 28 (I.N.S.)—Modesty seems to be the keynote of modern trans-Atlantic heroes, it appeared today after Ralph L. Bush, youthful Kane radio operator, did a "Lindy" on being interviewed regarding his feat in spanning the Atlantic.

Unlike Col. Charles A. Lindbergh, the "trans-Atlantic comet," Bush, the 19 year old son of Michael Bush, didn't cross the ocean himself but transmitted a radio message over a home-made set to Birmingham, England, and he did it alone.

Young Bush, who couldn't see anything remarkable in his achievement, was trying for distance on the night of Feb. 11. He invited all distant radio operators who "picked him up" to communicate with him.

When messages came pouring in from points hundreds of miles away, the boy felt gratified, but all his expectations were exceeded recently when a card was delivered from B. G. Bedwell, who owns a radio set in Birmingham, Eng.

Bush operates a self constructed five-watt set, NU-8 NM, and although he has been studying radio for the past four years, it was only last January 10 that he became a licensed operator, making his feat all the more remarkable.

Interviewed on the subject of trans-oceanic transmitting, Bush graciously dismissed the topic with all possible haste, explaining that he was about to depart on a fishing trip which to him seemed more important.

However, the youth imparted that he is intensely interested in radio and that he plans to make it his life's calling.

TAKEN TO HOSPITAL

Charles Medina, a Mexican employed by the Pennsylvania Railroad, and who lives at the camp on State Road, Andalusia, while walking from Torresdale to Cornwells Heights, Sunday, on Bristol Pike, Andalusia, was struck by an automobile which was described as being a Cadillac.

Thomas Flood, of Andalusia, who was sitting in his home at the time, and in front of whose house Medina was struck, immediately notified Officer H. KRECKER GIVEN NOT LESS THAN A YEAR IN CO. JAIL

Wesley Pettit Pleads Guilty And Sentence Is Deferred

TO TEST HIS LUNACY

Krecker Pleaded Guilty To Serious Charge of Small Boy

DOYLESTOWN, June 28.—Pleading guilty to a serious charge that implicated a small boy ten years old living at Perkasio, Raymond H. Krecker, of Fort Washington, was yesterday sentenced by Judge William C. Ryan to pay a fine of $500 and costs and serve not less than one or more than two years in the Bucks County Prison.

Many prominent persons from the North Penn section including clergymen, school teachers and business leaders, who have known Krecker for a number of years, testified as to his previous good reputation.

"It is incomprehensible that a man of your previous good standing should be guilty of such a crime," the Court commented. "I see no mitigating circumstances whatsoever other than the fact that you pleaded guilty and did enjoy a good reputation previous to this act."

Krecker was arrested in Perkasio Park by State Police. He has a summer bungalow there.

Wesley Pettit, 19, Doylestown, pleaded guilty before Judge Ryan on charges preferred by several young girls. The boy's mother testified that the money the boy made by working was needed by her. Judge Ryan deferred sentence until July 11 to await the investigation of a commission in lunacy.

The regular term of argument court started yesterday. Judge Shull, of Stroudsburg, will be present today to hear argument in a number of cases tried before him.

Judge Shull will preside to hear arguments for new trials in the following cases in Quarter Sessions Court:

Commonwealth vs. William Winkler; Commonwealth vs. Lawrence Gilbert, Jesse Wiley, Peggy Heltzel, Clara Gilbert.

On July 11 before Judge Williams, of Norristown, the following cases will be argued in Quarter Sessions Court: Commonwealth against Adam G. Calhoun, Commonwealth against William H. Donnell.

ORGANIZED BLACKMAIL

A Philadelphia association of manufacturers claims to have uncovered an "accident ring" which is annually swindling insurance companies, corporations, municipal governments and individuals out of millions of dollars.

The manufacturers charge that 250 lawyers' offices are ambulance-chasing institutions employing as many as thirty runners and having as agents policemen, internes and nurses in hospitals. Thirty thousand dishonest claims are presented in a year—millions of dollars being the loot. Some firms are making $250,000 a year out of this organized graft, and automobile insurance rates have advanced 10 per cent. annually since 1924 because of it.

If these Philadelphia figures are even approximately accurate national statistics would be astounding. The shyster lawyer, ambulance chaser and fictitious or exaggerated accident claims are not peculiar to the "City of Friends." They are found in every city.

Publicity is the best antidote for them, but vigilance of the court and bar associations and a public sentiment intolerant of such practices are needed to prevent them from taking root.

If the facts are as reported, they show how the evil can become entrenched in the community, clogging the courts with fraudulent suits, subjecting innocent persons and corporations to blackmail and creating a vicious system of corruption. The evil strikes at every automobile and property owner, every buyer of liability insurance and the courts themselves.

RECOVERING FROM THE BOOM

One winter resort season has passed since the Florida boom reached its zenith and then collapsed. In the season just closed Florida experienced none of the reckless land speculation, mushroom development, housing shortages and famines that marked the boom years and made them seem so unreal—so unreal that when the bubble burst none was surprised.

At this time one is in a better position than ever to appraise Florida and her future. A fair and accurate estimate was impossible during the boom period and before the state had weathered one post-boom season.

That Florida has a future, though perhaps not as great a one as her real estate agents once boasted, no one doubts. As long as the people in other states remain prosperous enough to indulge in the luxury, Florida winter resorts will continue to attract seekers after "hot winters." More than that, Florida has agricultural and industrial advantages still in the incipient stages of development.

Collapse of the real estate boom and the disastrous hurricane presented difficult problems, which have served only to accentuate the solid character of the state. Depositors have made possible the re-opening of twenty-five banks which closed their doors when the crash came, teaching Florida that her future depends upon her own citizens. The state probably lost more than it gained from the too-rapid development of the boom period.

If a man fails that's hard luck; if he succeeds, that's foresight and native ability.

Guests no longer help by shaking the table cloth. They just move the table back and shake a leg.

POLLYANNA

COLYUM

We used to believe that no man ought to kiss a girl until he is engaged to her. Now we believe that he should at least wait until the paint is dry.

"Ah, new car. How's the pick-up?"

"Haven't had much chance to try it yet. My wife rides with me most of the time."

When you're caught, it doesn't help matters to get angry about it.

This week's "pome": "He called her Lily, Violet, Rose, and every other flower of spring. She said: 'I can't be all of those, so you must Lilac everything.'"

Rooster: "The doctor says if I eat sweets I'll get worms. Now wouldn't that be delightful?"

Two negroes were arguing: "You ain't got no sense," said one. "No sense. Den what's dis head o' mine for?"

"Head? Dat's no head, nigger. Dat's jes' a button on top of yo' body to keep yo' backbone from unraveling."

The thing that keeps most people broke is trying to make other people think they're not broke.

It would be futile to try to interest the flapper in heaven by depicting it as a place of rest.

had hurt Mary's insides. Now she called it her Soul. Thus, With the large S. Before that it had been her insides. "My insides hurt, mother, when you come home tired with the lines on your face." There had been so many lines. Mary learned to watch for the new ones. She had learned to sit on mother's lap and smooth them out. Their ugliness repelled her. She had cried, "They're ugly, mother."

"Baby!"

Soft little fingers pressing them out. But they wouldn't leave. A thin network of furrows on forehead, and about the pale eyes, and the parenthesis about the mouth worming in more and more deeply.

"I'm just tired, Baby. Mother's not ill. Just tired."

"You're always tired, mother. Baby wants to play," and young David bundling her ineffectually away and sitting her in a corner with the tennis balls that rolled about so merrily. Tennis balls and mother, irrevocably bound together. Mother sewed them. Hundreds of them. Boxes of tennis balls stacked high in the living room, and beneath the desk, and behind the clothes tree in the hall. "I can't go, sweetheart. You go. You go and take David. Mother has to sew."

Tennis balls and mother. Tennis balls and Mary, but with what a difference. The sunlight and freedom of the courts for Mary, with the balls already sewn. "Mother sewed her life away that I might have my heritage of sunshine, and I shall take all of it, oh, all of it!"

What are you going to do with life, Mary?

"I shall fashion it and shape it to suit my ends. Life will be as wax in my hands, and I will wrench from it the key of the shades that will pour gold into my lap, gold enough in payment for mother. That is what I am going to do with life."

And the flood of ghostly moonlight promised her silver, too, those nights when Mary mused upon her destiny which was to be molded by her own firm, tanned fingers.

That was the life of Mary's walk. All that, you see. And what Wally Mason read into the elastic tread was tennis. Well, tennis for those

"WHAT EVERY GIRL SHOULD KNOW," with Patsy Ruth Miller, is a Warner Bros. picturization of this novel.

SYNOPSIS
Mary Sullivan—slender, beautiful, red-headed—is the meteor of the Garden City tennis tournament. A poetical, queerly spiritual girl is Mary, despite her physical process. She has grown up with tennis balls. Her mother died sewing them for a living, that Mary might be a lady. Her spirit lives on in Mary. Mary's impish brother, Robert, gets her acquainted with Wally Mason, a young man who has watched the matches. Wally thinks Mary's goddess walk is due to tennis; but Mary, who habitually pretends to talk to her dead mother, knows who set her feet on mountain tops!

CHAPTER I—Continued
Life pounces on you, Mary, while you are unaware, and when you awake, lo, you have a strange bed-fellow.

"Not me! Not with me it won't! I shall be ever ahead—fleet. I shall be quicksilver. Life is never quicksilver. Life is sudden. I will walk the mountain tops with the clouds. I will, mother!"

Life was simple now. So much more than it had ever been. Mary resolved to walk the high places, and her steadfast soul assured her that she could. Alone and free, swinging easily with no encumbrances. Life was simple now. There had been a time when she was weighted down to earth. The sudden mass of her mother, from whom life had been drained. It who couldn't see behind the sea-green eyes, and the red-gold hair that swung against her cheeks as she walked, and the firm little red mouth. Tennis for those who trod the earth.

"Very kind of you to walk home with us, Mr. Mason," Young Bob, beaming. "Very kind of you indeed."

Wally grinned and tumbled the little chap's head.

"My head seems to have a sort of fascination for you, eh, Mr. Mason?" asked Bob, looking up at his new friend.

"Well, yes," said Wally. "I think I'd call it that. A sort of fascination. Fact is, Robert," and he looked across Bob's head at Mary, "fact is, that all—well—most red heads do have a fascination for me. Would you attribute it to the fact that mine own shock is so nondescript?"

And he waited anxiously for young Robert's reply to that. "Would you attribute it to that?"

"I should think that would be highly probable, Mr. Mason."

"Oh, Bob, you funny infant!" The mists seemed to gently eddy in Mary's eyes. "How mother would have loved you, young Robert!"

Dusk had sifted down, had settled gently on tree and walk when they stopped before the small green cottage at the end of the street. "This is home," said Robert. "Good-bye, Mr. Mason. They shook hands gravely. "I hope Mary will ask you to come again."

"Oh, Robert!"

"He does want to come, Mary. I know he does!"

"I do, young Bob. I want to come

"I should like to come again and talk to you—"

again more than anything else on earth."

"Funny," thought Bob, "that Mr. Mason talks to me and looks at Mary!" He said good-bye again and begged Mr. Mason to excuse him, but he hadn't seen his cat since early that afternoon, and he thought he'd better find out if everything had gone well while he was away.

Mary and Wally Mason were left alone. There was nothing more beautiful in the world, Wally knew, than Mary's head against the background of the high green hedge.

"Miss Mary?"

"Yes, Mr. Mason?" Her eyes were so sweet when they looked at a fellow with that swarming green sea mistiness. "I should like to come again and talk to you—"

It was good to look down into her eyes and know that their frankness was equaled in his.

"I should like to have you—"

"Say Wally!" he pleaded, looking very boyish. A lock of the nondescript hair fell across his forehead, and he brushed it impatiently away. It obstructed the view of her eyes.

"Why—"

A faint flush glowed beneath the firm tan of her cheeks. "Why—of course, Wally." And there wasn't a hint of coquetry in the smile she gave him.

Now the words rushed forth. At most like Robert, thought Mary, and warmed to this very long, thin young man with the nondescript shock of hair and the very eager blue eyes. He had just come to Garden City. He was a reporter on the Daily Herald. He boarded at the Garden City House. He was alone. He was lonely. He had discovered some lovely walks. They could read. Did she like poetry? Robert Brooks? No, really, she did? What a find! Then they would—? Oh, Lord! What a forlunate break to have been given, the tennis tournament assignment.

Lord! Life was rich! Life was good! And he left with the mental picture of the gold of Mary's head and the green of her eyes and the misty way in which they looked at one.

As for Mary, yes. Life was good she thought.

If you were building a tire for yourself, you would not skimp on the rubber. Neither do we. This Company owns enormous rubber plantations including the largest producing plantation in the world. On these plantations are 10,000,000 rubber trees—pedigreed stock.

We have invented Sprayed Rubber—the outstanding process for producing rubber. Sprayed Rubber is the strongest and most uniform rubber known. It is made without the use of smoke or acids.

We have invented Web Cord, the most modern way of combining rubber and cords.

Observations About Events,
Persons and Things Which Are of General Interest. : : : :

A backward glance is worth a great deal at times—especially if through that look it may be ascertained just how much progress is being made.

Just now we wish to look upon the year 1853; and compare to a certain degree Bristol then and now—the period intervening being 74 years.

A quarter of a century ago William Bache summarized the business and industrial interests of Bristol at that time, telling that "the greater amount of business in general storekeeping is carried on in Mill street" and continued by telling of the various kinds of stores located there. The number aggregated 46, and included grocery and clothing stores, "two leather and shoe-finding stores," harness manufacturing, a grain and saw mill, two drug and medicine stores, two bakers and one public house.

Mill street's total business establishments now is placed at 90 or more.

Quoting from the summarization of Mr. Bache's we learn that "On Buckle street has recently been erected Strang & Morgan's malleable iron and tilt-hammer works, now going into active operation. The business of rope making is also carried on in this street." This is the only reference made to public places on that thoroughfare.

Upon passing down that Buckle street today one will see nine stores and one factory.

In that year, dwelt upon in the article mentioned above, it was learned that on Radcliffe street, there were three or four establishments where the sale of various goods was carried on; on Wood street there were two or three more; while Cedar and Otter were mentioned as having one store each.

Today but a short distance has to be traversed before a store-front is glimpsed on any of these streets. And in the section, known as Harriman, recently added to the Borough, this is likewise true.

In all the number of places where groceries, produce, clothing, furniture, notions, hardware, confectionery, and the like are sold is placed far up in the hundreds.

In 1926 mercantile licenses were granted to 49 grocers, 28 produce dealers, 71 individuals selling notions, in Bristol. Besides this there were scores for merchants placing other wares before the public.

BILLY'S UNCLE

In the past few years there have also come into our midst those industries larger in scope, such as the airplane factory, boiler works, soap manufacturing establishment, and numerous others.

Truly, Bristol is a thriving industrial center.

Spring Song

Between the buds and the blossoms,
When poets spring-idyls indite,
Comes a time, in the seasonal sequence,
That is known as the Doctor's Delight.

The web-footed mud larks are mating
And building their nests in the drain;
And hark to the gutter snipe, singing
His bronchial song, in the rain!
The red-flannelled slicker is with us,
The sore-throated flu-jay is here,

The crocus is waiting to croak us—
No wonder the medicos cheer!

A timekeeper for a railroad gang in Pennsylvania asked a new workman his name.

"George Washington, suh," replied the dusky son of toil.

"You're not the man who cut down the cherry tree, are you?" asked the timekeeper, jokingly.

"No, suh! 'Twasn't me, suh. This is the first wuk Ah's done for ovah a year."

Every boost is a knock for some folks.

The time seems to be coming when a good steak will have to be bought on the dollar down, balance weekly basis.
